Here's the thing: if we work together, I'd like it to feel as though we're already friends. You know the sort - the ones who snort with laughter mid-cuppa, chat about absolutely anything, and accept each other just as they are.

Think of this as my friendship profile on a dating site, if you will. I'm one of those people who took rather a roundabout route before finding their way back to what they truly love—what truly defines them.

As a child, I made up stories, poems, and songs, sang in choirs and bands, hosted kids' radio shows, and generally did my best to make the world a bit brighter, kinder, and more lovely.

Then, I decided to be sensible. Off to university I went, built a career in marketing—and ended up dreadfully unhappy. On an unbearably hot April day, I finally plucked up the courage to quit.

From Words to Memories: Crafting Unforgettable Ceremonies

As it turns out, best decision ever. I rediscovered my love for writing—through books, articles for platforms like Spiegel Online, and crafting unique ceremonies for wonderful people.

Music found its way back too. I started singing at weddings and christenings again, and during lockdowns, I even arranged neighbourhood concerts from windows and balconies.

Rather than giving corporate talks about monetising digital assets, I now stand before lovely people and speak about love, connection, and life. And afterwards, we raise a glass together—rather wonderful, don't you think?

What makes it extra special: I get to bring both my mother tongues to the ceremony, helping international couples weave their cultures and languages into something beautifully unique.

Born into a family of British musicians and raised bilingual in Freiburg, I've called many places home - from Cologne to Kitzbühel, Karlsruhe to Berlin, with stops in Mittweida and by Lake Ammersee in Bavaria. These days, you'll find me and my family in a charming old farmhouse in sunny Baden-Württemberg.

So that's my tale— I'd love to hear yours.

I'd love to hear about your journey. What keeps you up at night with excitement? Why did some paths work while others didn't? Most importantly, why are you the best idea ever for each other?

I want to share laughs and perhaps a few happy tears, over tea, coffee, beer, wine, or just good old tap water. I want to hear every surprising moment, every sigh of relief, every bit of the story that brought you together.

Then we'll dream up how your wedding should feel. Who'll be there? Which music matters most? What needs saying, and what's better left to knowing smiles?

Together, we'll create a day that lets you fall asleep with full hearts—and wake up, days, weeks, months, years later, grinning and thinking: Yes. That was absolutely us.

Fancy starting this adventure together? I'd love to hear from you! Drop me a message—I'd love to chat.

Looking forward to hearing your story,

Ellen-Jane

P.S.

While most of my couples are in Freiburg, Karlsruhe, Stuttgart, the Black Forest, Berlin, and Munich (purely practical, you see), I'm more than happy to venture further afield for the right match. ❤️
